In the last act of "Jerry," which Cathrine C. Cushing wrote for Billie Burke and Charles Frohman produced for the omedienne at the Lyceum Theatre Saturday night, Miss Burke was disclosed in nk silk pajamas. They were not the baggy envelopes of masculine use, but might have been described by their maker as "tailored." They seemed to be intended to "fit the figure." They went in at the ankle and there were curves at the waist. Miss Burke later shed them behind a ereen and disappeared from the ravished lew of her first night admirers arrayed a diaphanous frock of pale and spring-in a diaphanous frock of pale and spring-like tints.

There had been previous revelations of the actress in striking attire. She was seen first in an automobile approaching the room in which the action of the play passed. When the car stopped before the door she was at the wheel. Later she put on an old fashioned empire gown that had belonged to her aunt and reappeared afterward to close the first act in a dinner gown. The first sight of her in the second act was in a peignoir over her night dress. After that she got into riding breeches and stuck there until the tailored pink pajamas of the last act. So much for the visual delights supplied by the new drama to her admirers. It may be added that Miss Burke was never prettier in her girlish way than in the various disguises of Jerry.

And the new play provides Miss Burke

And the new play provides Miss Burke with the opportunity to reveal all her endearing young charms. She loves the forty-year-old betrothed of her aunt and she sets out to acquire him. She slangs her mother, devotes much time to snatch-ing his handkerchief out of the sleeve of an elderly Anglomaniac's coat, calls fre-quently on the Deity and is said to be the girl "an hour ahead" of the times. Her conspiracy to get her lover away from is flancee is with this Kansas City imitaof a Briton, since he is anxious to rears devoted. By the simple expedient of announcing the breaking of the former engagement and the existence of the new one the crisis is precipitated.

Story of the Farce.

It was of course Jerry who telephoned the false news to the newspaper office, and when she frankly admitted she did it because she wanted to marry her aunt's betrothed she was punished by being put into bed in pink pajamas. There she lan-guished for four days under lock and key, dished for four days under lock and key, ed on milk and eggs by the butler.

Mrs. Cushing here abandoned all prenence of plausibility and the fun was of he most extravagant. Seemingly serious in her despair, Miss Burke started to take to be able to the conveniently at the serious of the bottle conveniently at the serious of the bottle conveniently at tablets out of a bottle conveniently at hand were to do the trick. Letters to her family and her lover, flowers in her hand and the rigid pose of death—these were ome of the episodes that preceded the ar-rival of the physician. Theatreguers with long memories hought of the old negro minstrel afterpleces when the pretended suicide was aturday night soon discovered that the peroine was shamming and imparted the news to her family. So it was possible for them to disappoint her by speaking heartlessly of her demise.

All the old fun of the situation was ork but daintily limned in pale tints of rose color and baby blue. And when the with his captor they leave behind them an irresistibly charming bedroom with gar-lands of roses holding back its pale blue draperies and white muslin shirred over its azure walls.

Miss Barke Displayed.

Mrs. Cushing has in this successful way rescued Miss Burke from the raging wa of drama into which Mr. Maugham so heartlessly plunged her. "Jerry" is Bille Burke raised to the ath power. harms in their most alluring estate. It may be that Mrs. Cushing has made her play too close a fit. But no such complaint will ever come from the actress's In spite of the author's devotion to her

As one of a quar-let accuses another and each is in turn found innocent there were humor, charac-ler and naturalness in the dialogue and

Cushing could write entertaining comedies for adults if she continued in this vein. The poison and the deathbed scene are at least interesting evidence of the swiftness with which beginners in the theatre contrive to get hold of some of its most hackneyed devices. Mrs. Cushing, however, cannot surely remember the legro minstrels.

Alice Johns, also condemned to prema-ture old age, was amusing as the mother of the infant prodigy of slang and bold-ness acted by Billie Burke, and Alian Pol-lock so soon as he talked himself out of his usual alcoholic manner drew some humor out of the part of the pseudo Eng-lishman.

Home of the scenes may even amuse others. But "Jerry" serves its purpose delightfully as a means of revealing Miss Burke so well and providing a springtime entertainment for the young.

PEOPLE'S SYMPHONY CONCERT. LAST DRESS REHEARSAL TO-DAY. WOODS HAS REPUBLIC THEATRE.

Mme. Lambert Appears as Sololet in Wagner and Charpentier.

The final concert of the People's Sym phony Society took place at Carnegie Hall vesterday afternoon and Conductor Franz Arens provided a programme stimulating to the imagination if not altogether ennobling in its execution. Weber's "Oberon" overture opened the programme, and after it Mme. C. L. Lambert sang "Elsa's Dream." Liszt's "Tasso" followed, and then the soprano sang "Depuis le Jour." from "Louise." The two intermezzi from "Spring" and Victor Herbert's "American Fantasia" were the remaining numbers on the programme.

Dr. Ca-banes delved into this and printed Tasso's Nine own account of his symptoms as given to Dr. Gioralmo, Mercuriale. Dr. Rothe probed the matter, and Dr. Roncoroni also. The latter said Tasso was perhaps not insane in the accepted sense of the term, but he certainly was deranged. Many have written verse and many have writ-ten music about Tasso, and if you stay at the Tramontano Hotel in Sorrento you may walk where he did. But after all none of these matters affect Liszt's music. # COVERED ASH CARTS URGED 7 YEARS AGO

City Ignores Recommendation Made by McClellan's Commission.

NEW YORK FAR BEHIND

Sanitary Experts Point to Improved Methods Used in Many Countries.

Practically all sanitary experts in the city agree that the cans and carts for the handling of ashes should be covered so as to protect pedestrians from the annoyance of flying ash dust. More than seven years ago a committee of experts, appointed by Mayor McClellan and com-prising H. de B. Parsons, Rudolph Hering and Samuel Whinery, made a report in which they recommended emphatically that the ash carts should be covered.

"The ash and garbage carts," the report said, "should be covered. There is no style of cover in use that is entirely satisfactory, but inventive genius no doubt will improve the present method of cart covering. At present the trouble of covering and uncovering for collections, often not over twenty-five feet apart, results in leaving the carts uncovered until

Despite the length of time that has Despite the length of time that has elapsed since that report was made and the fact that in the meantime almost every country in Europe has adopted covered carts which absolutely prevent ashes from being blown in the faces of women and children nothing of the sort has been adopted in this city.

Furthermore, almost every sanitary expert in this city ras been abroad in the past four or five years, has studied the methods of ashes collection in England and other countries and has lectured con-cerning them. No impression has been made on the city officials to stimulate them to do something to eradicate a nuisance of which hundreds of persons constantly complain.

John H. Gregory, a consulting engineer and associate of Rudolph Hering of 170 and associate of Rudolph Hering of 110
Broadway, discussed yesterday the advantages of having covered ash cans and ash carts. He agreed with Col. William F. Morse that it would be an excellent thing if a board of impartial experts were appointed to study the needs in New York.

"There is no doubt," said Mr. Gregory, hat the ash cans and the ash carts, as ell as the garbage carts, should be Excellent progress in that line them work surprisingly. Covered wagons are being used in this country. In Seattle, for instance, properly arranged canvas covers have been found to have advantages over covers of wood and
